BUNCHED PARAGRAPHS

RELATING TO AFFAIRS IN THIS AND ADJOINING STATES.

Suspect Eludes Sheriff Callahan

Waynesboro, Va. June 27. — Sheriff Callahan of Wayne County, Va. has been unable to locate the person known as "Quinn Jim," who is supposed to have shot and killed Mark White from a ambush, followed their man during the night but lost him at Oakdale. Sheriff Callahan thinks the fugitive secured a horse there. The report that two of the sheriff's men were shot in a fight is erroneous. Judge Callahan issued warrants for the arrest of James and Cass Salyers on the charge of murdering White. The bloodhounds on the scent with the posse ran into the Salvers home and jumped up on the bed and this prompted the posse to take the warrants. Both the Salvers have disappeared and are said to have left on horseback.

Former Congressman.

Hopkinsville, Ky. June 25. — Hon. James A. McKendall, former congressman from this district, died at his home at Oak Grove. He was known everywhere as "Quinn Jim." Prominent came to Mr. McKendall through his strenuous and successful championing of the bill of which he was the author to take the tax on quinine. The speech, which, through its humor, logic and earnestness sent that measure through the house and put the drug within the reach of the thousands who had been unable to use it before on account of the prohibitive tax upon it, was printed in newspapers all over the United States and was quoted by politicians for years after.

Found Buried Treasure.

Waynesboro, Ky. June 27. — Directed by old "Quinn Jim," a negro servant, searchers found $15,000 which had been secreted in and around the home of John Pitt, who died on his farm near Vienna, Ky. Pitt had the reputation in life of being a miser, and shortly before he died he confided to a man about fifty of the place and to "Quinn Jim," who kept him in the place, that he had hidden some gold and silver at various places around the home. When the news of the old man's death reached town, Griffin and some friends went to the Pitt homestead. After searching for several hours they unearthed the treasure of seven of the fruit jars. The treasure contained $12,000 in gold and $3,000 in silver and paper money.
